

Advance Passenger Information

From 2009, the UK Government will require Advance Passenger Information for all passengers travelling internationally into and out of the UK. This is being rolled out over the coming year. This information is compulsory and is required for the purposes of ensuring aviation safety and security.

- the governments of various countries require airlines to collect Advance Passenger Information for passengers prior to travel
- it is important that the information is accurate so that you do not have any delay when you pass through Immigration on arrival in these countries
